BBC Scotland presenter Nick Sheridan died of a brain aneurysm after collapsing while running, friends have revealed - as Humza Yousaf led tributes to the 'extremely talented journalist and author'.

The children's author and journalist, from Wexford in Ireland, was out jogging when he is said to have suddenly collapsed for the second time in recent weeks.

Mr Sheridan, who was best known for presenting shows including Drivetime and Reporting Scotland, died on Wednesday after several days in intensive care, surrounded by family.

BBC Scotland announced his passing on social media this morning, with the BBC reporting Sheridan died after a 'short illness'.

First Minister of Scotland Humza Yousaf led tributes to Sheridan as he began his weekly questions in the Scottish Parliament chamber, describing him as a 'extremely talented journalist and author'.

Journalist Robbie Armstrong posted a photo of Mr Sheridan sat on a seawall with running gear on and said his friend had been 'taken far too early from a world you gave your absolute everything to'.

He added: 'You brought happiness into every moment that I had the sheer luck to share with you; you shone light into my darkest moments; you gave me laughter when there were tears; you believed in me when I didn't believe in myself.'

'I'll cherish the swims, the many pizzas we shared (even the monstrosity that was the meat-pizza!), the nonsensical voice notes, the pure craic and the razor wit.'

He spoke about camping trips that they shared together and 'falling asleep under the stars'. Mr Armstrong also shared footage of his friend singing in a pub and wrote: 'I twice saw you bring a bar into stunned silence by singing the Wexford Rebellion song Boolavogue in your angelic voice to rapturous applause.'

'You were a joy to behold and a precious gift to this world. I'm utterly heartbroken and lost without you.'

Former First Minister Nicola Sturgeon also paid tribute to the 'talented and vivacious' star today, while his colleagues at the broadcaster remembered him as a 'lovely man'.

He is best known for presenting Drivetime, Lunchtime Live and the Sunday Show. He later wrote a book series for children which included The Case of the Runaway Brain and The Case of the Phantom Treasure.

On Thursday lunchtime, BBC Reporting Scotland aired a tribute to Mr Sheridan, consisting of a black and white picture of him along with his years of life.

A minute's silence for him was also held at BBC Scotland offices, it was reported.

The presenter's last post on X dated February 24 read: 'On air from 8am with your weekend edition of Good Morning Scotland, reflecting on 2 years since Putin's order for a Russian invasion of Ukraine.'

This is sad news. Such a young man with so much more to give. My condolences go Nick's family, friends and colleagues.

Tributes from colleagues and fans rolled in on X, formerly Twitter, after the announcement

'My thoughts are with his family, friends and colleagues at this difficult time.'

Fans also expressed their grief at the news, with one commenting: 'I liked him on the couch and presenting the News. He was a natural in front of the camera. So sad to hear this.'

Sheridan was working on his upcoming fourth book, which tragically he won't see published in June of this year.

Titled 'The Case of the Poisonous Pigs', it will be the third in a series hailed as the 'Scooby-Doo for a new generation'.

His excitement for the project shined through in his posts on X, with one in January reading: 'Getting an email with illustrations for Book 4 by the incredible David O'Connell' accompanied by a Muppet GIF and emojis.

It is devastating and disorientating to have to come to terms with such a vibrant life being curtailed so cruelly and suddenly in its prime, with so much potential yet to be realised.

His awe-inspiring talent, humour, and kindness will remain my abiding memory of Nick Sheridan.
